Global Outlook

Future competition for land and water

With an expected world population of 9 billion people in 2050, the global need for Food, Feed, Fibre and Fuel has become a matter of high political concern. In order to satisfy the ever increasing needs of “the four Fs”, there will be a progressively severe competition for limited land and water resources. This will be highlighted from four different perspectives:

- Agricultural policies over the past 40 years – three cases.
- Opportunities and challenges for farmers, researchers and business in the agricultural sector.
- Opportunities and challenges in the forestry sector.
- From knowing to acting – paths to a sustainable future.

Key note speaker: H.E. Dr. Jacques Diouf, Minister and Personal Adviser of the President of the Republic, Senegal, and Director General of FAO 1994–2011.
